Personal statement and research interest:

During my PhD study (2006-2010) in Prof. Wilhelm Schwaeble’s laboratory and my Post-Doctoral Research Fellow (2011-2014) in Prof. Nigel Brunskill laboratory, I’ve developed excellent research skills and learned a brought variety of valuable and “cutting edge” techniques. I have earned myself the reputation of a hardworking, independent, competent, reliable, creative and most trust-worthy academic co-worker. I have shown the capabilities in addressing and resolving research associated challenges in the day-to-day running of a very research active laboratory. I have also supervised undergraduate and post-graduate students in the Department in parallel to my research projects.

I am highly interested to continue exploring the role of complement and complement-associated disorders in various models of human disease with the aim to explore new avenues for prophylactic and/or therapeutic applications to limit human morbidity and mortality. In addition, I am working on monoclonal antibody development and have been awarded an STDF grant since 2020 under title of “Development of biological therapeutics for some complement-mediated disorders” for 3 years.

I did research also in other areas of interest that includes vaccine development, pathogenesis of various clinically important bacteria.

Statement of teaching interest:

I am very interested also in teaching undergraduate and postgraduate students. My philosophy in teaching is based on close mutual interaction with students implementing new models of non-classical teaching like competency-based learning and problem based-learning utilising the new available technologies. I've established the 1st blended model of learning and education in Mansoura University through the Postgraduate Programme of Master of Immunology and Regenerative Medicine in English.
